FATHER AND FIVE CHILDREN BURN TO DEATH IN FIRE WHICH DESTROYS THEIR HOME AT BROWN'S MILLS, N. J.

Six of Family Lose Lives While Mother and Daughter Are Injured Seriously When Flames Sweep Home — Two Survivors Not Expected to Recover from Injuries

BROWN'S MILLS, N. J., Mar. 11.—A father and five children were burned to death early today when their home on Sunset Lake was destroyed by fire. The mother and another daughter were seriously burned and may not live.

The dead:
William Stevenson, the father;
Ernest Stevenson, 11;
Shinn Stevenson, 12;
Alfred Stevenson, 9;
Mildred Stevenson, 6;
Lily Stevenson, one month.

The father placed kerosene on the kitchen stove, it is said, and this blazing up caught him, badly burning him about the eyes, and it is believed that he was blinded.

Mrs. Rebecca Stevenson, fifty, the mother, was burned about the hands and arms.

Clara Stevenson, twenty, suffered a broken hip when she fell from a second story window. She also suffered severe burns.

The daughter was taken to the Burlington County Hospital in Mount Holly. Mrs. Stevenson was taken to the home of friends in Pemberton, seven miles from the Stevenson home.

All of the family except Clara and the father were asleep when the fire started at 12.30 a. m.

Clara got up to warm some milk for the smallest child.

The daughter awakened the father to help her and to bring up the fire in the kitchen stove. Stevenson obtained the kerosene. With a roar the flames burst forth from the stove.

Stevenson was caught in the flare and he was so badly burned about the eyes it is believed his sight was destroyed.

His clothing was destroyed and he wandered away from the house. He was found lying in the grass about twenty feet from the house and died a short time after he was carried into the Burlington County Hospital.

Clara, upon recovering consciousness in the hospital, gave a graphic description of the tragedy to Coroner Benjamin F. Farmer, of Burlington County.

"I was awakened by the cries of my little sister," said the girl, "and got up to heat some milk for the baby. I called my father, and he came to the kitchen and poured kerosene on the stove to make it burn quicker."

Chinese Medical Student To Address League Group

A Chinese medical student from the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, will address the members of the Bristol Group of Epworth League as they assemble in the Methodist Church, Halmerville, next Friday night, for the bi-monthly rally.

The speaker's name is Mr. Wong, and he will have a most interesting talk to deliver. Special music will be included in the program, and the Rev. Alexander B. Davidson, of Trevese, president of the group, will preside.

"Happy School Days" Goes Over Big Here

The musical numbers that were presented before the acts of "Happy School Days" last evening, were exceptionally well given, as were also the two acts of the sketch. The program which was participated in by members of the choir of the Methodist Church was one which pleased all who had the privilege of attending.

Miss Eva D. Smoyer gave as a vocal selection "Lilies of Lorraine," and Mrs. Reba Miller played with "Silver Moon," from "My Maryland," giving "Hello, Swaine, Hello" as an encore.

During the last act of the play an entertainment was given in the school room by the pupils. Those who favored with recitations were: Marie Reunert, Dorothy Myers, Frank Zeala's Francis Wear, Miss Florence Pearce and Frank Parr sang a selection in a very able manner at the same entertainment. Miss Elizabeth McBrien acted the part of the school principal excellently.

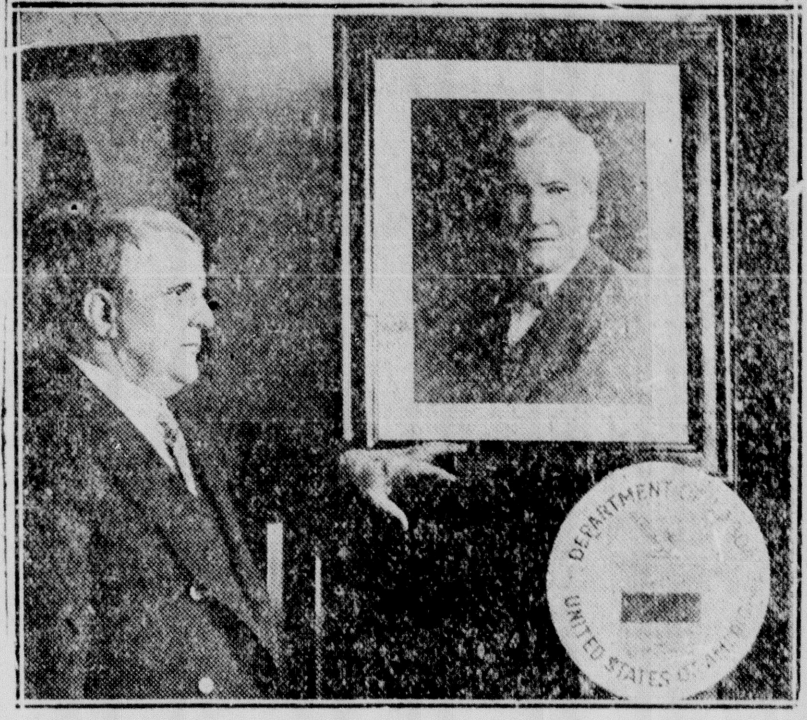

A large crowd was present at last night's performance, and a larger group is expected to attend tonight. The sketch will be presented again this evening in the Sunday school room of the church.

HIS HOBBY IS SPEECHES

SECRETARY OF LABOR JAMES J. DAVIS

is revealed as only member of President Coolidge's cabinet who is really fond of making public addresses

"Jim" Davis, Secretary of Labor, Finds Joy in Making Speeches

By International News Service
WASHINGTON, Mar. 11.—One of the chief delights that amounts almost to chief delight with James J. Davis, the Secretary of Labor, is making speeches. No member of the Harding-Coolidge Cabinet has traveled farther or talked on more numerous occasions than "Jim" Davis, the little Welshman who came to the United States as a poor immigrant boy and worked himself up from puddler in the steel mills to a position in the Cabinet of two Presidents.

Not one of his friends would accuse Davis of being an orator, but he has a faculty of getting his message over, no matter what type of audience may confront him. His two favorite topics are children and registration of the alien population of the United States.

On these two topics he can discourse for hours. Davis is the father of five children, three of them born in Washington since he became Secretary of Labor in 1921, while as director general of the Loyalty Order of the Moose, he has charge of nearly 1,000 children in the home maintained by the order in Mooseheart, Ill. He believes that every child in this country is entitled to at least a high school education and his talks along this line are devoted to a "living wage" for the country's workers in order that their children may receive an education.

One of his chief duties is keeping undesirable aliens out of the country. This is a man's size task, he admits. It could be lightened to some extent if all the aliens already in the country could be registered and those who are here illegally could through this registration system be checked up and promptly deported to the land from whence they came.

If the wheat farmers, cotton planters and fruit growers need harvest hands when the crops are being harvested, Davis is the man who supplies them. Through the employment division he has been instrumental in supplying thousands of "hands."

He has some decided views on conducting labor disputes and the considers has stepped in to prevent many menacing strikes.

"I am a great believer in the theory that employer and worker should get around the council table and settle their dispute before the strike is called," he has asserted on many occasions. Under Davis the Conciliation Division has grown to large proportions.

The Labor Secretary is an early riser and is frequently at his desk in the Labor Department when the 7 o'clock whistle blows. It is a habit acquired while in the steel mills.

Although he is a member of two golf clubs, Davis admits he is probably the poorest golfer in the Cabinet.

FRICK DIES, DESPITE EFFORTS OF FRIENDS

Fifty-Seven Tight-Lipped Men Back at Their Work Today

DEATH CAME QUIETLY

L. N. S. Staff Correspondent
EVANSTON, Ill., March 11.—Fifty-seven tight-lipped men were back on the job at the Illinois Public Service Company today—the tragedy in their hearts written on every face. Alfred Frick, their buddy, the man for whom each had given his full time and energy since last Sunday morning in an effort to save his life, will sit among them no more. The tense human drama closed with death the victim.

Frick, who had come to be known as the "living dead man," died at St. Francis Hospital last night at 10.19 o'clock after his fifty-seven fellow workers had kept him alive 108 hours by pressing the walls of his chest to give him the breath of life.

Death came quietly. Shortly before the end, the brave youth—he was only 22—looked up at his father and mother and smiled, a faint smile that seemed to say "Farewell." He was too weak to talk. A moment later he lapsed into a coma and did not regain consciousness.

But tragic as was his death, even more tragic was the grief of his friends—that crew of loyal men who had labored day and night, in teams of two, and in fifteen minute relays, in the hope that life would win. Many of the men, unshamed, broke down and wept. The two who were on duty when Dr. H. H. Conley pronounced the patient dead, refused to quit the task, hoping against hope that they could revive the spark of life.

Young Frick was stricken early last Sunday with Landry's paralysis, a very rare disease. It cut off the nerve supply to the diaphragm and chest walls, causing the lungs to collapse. Breathing stopped. Technically, the youth was "dead." But it was found that by pressing the sides of his chest, bellows fashion, artificial respiration could be induced.

FORMER RESIDENT HERE DIES IN LOS ANGELES

Grace Davidson, Daughter Of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Stoneback, Succumbs

HAD HOST OF FRIENDS

A daughter of a well-known Bristolian, and a former resident here, died at her Los Angeles home early this morning.

Today word was received by Chauncey E. Stoneback that his daughter, Grace Ellen, wife of David L. Davidson, was claimed by death today at 2 a. m. Mrs. Davidson had been in ill health for a period of several months, and in January her parents visited her California home while Mrs. Davidson was receiving treatment in a hospital there.

The deceased attended the public schools in Bristol during her early girlhood, later being employed by the Bucks County Gazette, of Bristol; then going to Denver she worked as a proof-reader on the Denver Post.

During the World War, the former Miss Stoneback spent several months in France with the Red Cross Corps, and upon her return to the United States kept up her membership in the Rocky Mount Division of the Red Cross, at Denver.

It was in September, of 1923, that she moved to Los Angeles, and until a short time prior to her death was employed by the Los Angeles Examiner. For a short period during her stay in the West, this former Bristol woman was employed by a motion picture concern.

The body will be forwarded here to the home of the parents of the deceased.

VARIED PROGRAM GIVEN AT FATHERS' ASSOCIATION

Two Hundred Men Enjoy An Evening of Instruction And Entertainment

BASKETBALL GAME, TOO

There was a varied program given at the monthly meeting of the Fathers' Association last night when 200 men assembled in the high school auditorium.

Hon. John H. Logan, commissioner of Education of New Jersey, gave an interesting talk; Dudley E. Bell, of Bristol, performed as a magician; there were instrumental numbers of high school orchestra, as directed by Fred Stephenson; vocal selections by Mr. Berdick, Trenton, N. J., and then a basketball game between married and single men of the Association.

Two hundred men were held mystified and terrified last night as they sat and gazed in rapturous amazement at Dudley E. Bell as he imitated the world's greatest magicians—Thurston and Houdini—performing wondrous tricks with cards and other paraphernalia.

Bell, 824 Radcliffe street, volunteered to appear last evening in the roll of "the flying magician" by John H. Hardy, president of the Fathers' Association, who presided at the meeting. The magician was assisted by "Lew" Klingberg.

Bell is well known here and his audience gave him general applause as he went through the assemblage doing all sorts of tricks and calling upon men he knew to aid and assist him in mystifying the audience.

Previous to the entertainment furnished by Mr. Bell there was an interesting address given by Hon. John H. Logan, Commissioner of Education. He spoke upon some of the essentials necessary in an education to properly equip the boys and girls of today to take a proper place in the world.

There were instrumental numbers given by the high school orchestra and Mr. Berdick, of Trenton, N. J., former physical director at Trenton Y. M. C. A.

The much discussed game between the married men and the single members of the Fathers' Association, for supremacy of the basketball court, was definitely settled last night for another year, when the bachelors trimmed the henpecked members of the association by the score of 39 to 20.

The only thing to mar the sweet victory of the Hoffman five was the complete eclipse of the "mighty atom," Charles Heiliger, who didn't get a point—Ralph Ratcliffe attending to that.

"Herby" Lawrence was the high scorer for the single five, arching eight field goals through the cords, Roy Hoffman, Hanford and Hoffman each getting their share of points.

The married men surprised the large crowd, who waited well into the night to see the fun. When "Bud" Pearson lined up his team for the opening whistle the line-up had such stars as Ewald Henry, "Les" Longhurst, William Fine, Ralph Ratcliffe and Parke Wetherill included in it.

When Referee Spohn blew the whistle a battle royal started. The single lads swooped down on the married men's basket in a twinkling, Holland shooting the first two points in as many minutes. Hoffman soon added to the score by arching a beautiful double decker through the cords from a difficult angle. Things looked bad for the married chaps when suddenly "Les" Longhurst worked his way into a good position and shot a field goal. Bedlam let loose then, as the married men had the crowd with them, but the joy was short lived. The bachelors added field goals in quick succession and at the end of the period it looked bad for the oldsters.

After the "rest" which did much for the married men's wind, a new and fiery outfit took the floor. E. Henry, a star in the good old days, started to step around the floor at a rate that had the fans wildly cheering, and

TWO OF JEANETTI'S FREED FROM TRIAL IN AUTO STEALING

Alleged Automobile Thievery Occupies Attention Of U. S. Court

OPERATED IN BRISTOL

Cars Alleged to Have Been Stored at Keystone Garage

TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 11.—George and Tony Jeanetti have been eliminated from the list of six defendants whose cases went to trial Tuesday in United States District Court before Judge Bodine on charges of conspiring to steal, store and transport automobiles in inter-state commerce. Upon the conclusion of yesterday's session, Morris B. Seigel, counsel for the Jeanetti brothers, asked that the court direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty as to the two defendants on the ground of insufficient evidence. The motion was granted.

After the Government had rested its case, John L. Heher, counsel for Forman H. Wetherill, proprietor of the Greenwood Garage, to whom Alexander J. Keeler testified having sold fifteen stolen automobiles, moved that his client be dismissed. Mr. Heher, however, made the provision that if the motion was denied that he could enter his defense. The court ruled that such a motion would preclude defense testimony. Mr. Heher then indicated that he would make the same motion later.

In his opening address before the jury, Mr. Heher declared that he would prove through disinterested witnesses that Wetherill had no actual knowledge that the machines purchased from Keeler had been stolen and that his client was "innocent beyond the shadow of a doubt." In explaining the first transaction that Wetherill had with Keeler, cited as one of the ten overt acts in the indictment, Mr. Heher stated that for several months Keeler had stopped at the Greenwood Garage for gasoline and oil. During one of Keeler's visits to the garage, Mr. Heher said, he asked Wetherill if the garage proprietor was interested in the purchase of a Ford sedan. It was his client's business to deal in second-hand automobiles, and after considerable discussion the sale was agreed upon for the purchase price of $350. Stanley Wetherill, the defendant's son, was paid $5 by Keeler to drive the car to this city from Philadelphia, counsel explained. Later the machine, known in the case as the Zellmeyer car, was found to have been stolen. Keeler, Mr. Heher stated, made no statement nor was there any indication by Keeler that the automobile had been stolen.

Paul H. Wendel, counsel for Joseph Lester, in his opening address declared that his client was formerly in partnership with Anthony J. Episcopo, another defendant, in the Keystone Motor Sales Company at Bristol. After a certain Van Sant was taken into the company, Mr. Wendel stated, Lester withdrew, but at no time during the partnership did his client have knowledge that cars purchased from Keeler had been stolen.

Similar defense will be entered by Episcopo, Marvin A. Spaulding, his counsel, announced in his opening. Mr. Spaulding stated that Keeler and John Jeanetti rented space in the Bristol garage for second-hand machines. Episcopo, he stated, was not interested in Keeler's business and also had no knowledge that the cars stored in the garage had been stolen.

After pleading that Joseph Jeanetti was innocent of any conspiracy, Counselor Seigel called him as the defendant's first witness. Jeanetti said that he was 23 years old, married and resided at 253 Mercer street. During March, 1925, the witness testified that his brother, John, offered to sell him a Ford sedan for $400. Joseph said that he agreed to buy the car and paid a $35 deposit. He used the machine during the following seven weeks for pleasure purposes until he was arrested at Bristol in May, and the car confiscated by the police.

Under cross-examination of the witness, Assistant United States District Attorney James Turp attempted to show that after discovering police at the Keystone Garage, Joseph Jeanetti hastily drove away. This was denied by the defendant.

The Government's case was concluded after Keeler had been vigorously cross-examined. Scores of questions were hurled at him by the defendants' counsel, but while he devoted on what appeared to be minor points he clung to the essentials of his original story.

Elimination of George and Tony Jeanetti leaves four of the original defendants still on trial. They are Wetherill, Episcopo, Lester and Joseph Jeanetti. John Jeanetti, Keeler and William Struble have pleaded guilty, while the indictments against Frank and Ruth Jeanetti were nolle prossed at the opening of the trial, which goes into its fourth day this morning.

—Mr. Samuel Rogers has returned to his home on Mansion street after spending several days in the Hahnemann Hospital in Philadelphia, Pa., where he underwent an operation.

ADVERTISING

A government report now in preparation at Washington includes a statement that $1,000,000,000 is being spent this year in the United States for periodical advertising. This huge sum is being expended for advertising in newspapers, magazines and trade papers only.

Arriving at such a position in the realm of business and finance the subject of advertising must command attention of all. It has become a factor in American industry, business, commerce and society. Advertising has become a component part of all productiveness recognized by every producer as an essential before large-scale production is possible. Advertising is salesmanship on a large scale basis. When the factory succeeded the hand craftsman, advertising superseded the suitcase salesman as a natural consequence.

The United States is today the greatest industrial and commercial nation in the world, and partly because it is the greatest advertising nation in the world. The vast sums involved annually, the large and consistent increase of this vast involved sum, a well defined public demand and satisfactory results obtained combine to vindicate past and future expenditures for advertising.

It has ever been gratifying to the publishers of the daily newspaper that they have been able by a natural growth to maintain their pre-eminence as a medium of advertising.

THE GREATER WASHINGTON

Albert Bushnell Hart, a decidedly orthodox historian, is obviously peeved at the authors of two outstanding biographies of Washington of recent publication, though an analysis of his complaint leaves a doubt as to the reason.

He says that neither Rupert Hughes nor Mr. Woodward makes it clear enough that Washington was primarily a business man, who would, if living today, be the head of some great corporation. But others, reading the new biographies, get the impression that Hughes and Woodward have done that very job better than any of their predecessors. There are not a few people who share with certain other modern historians the notion that these new biographies are about the first approach toward a really honest interpretation of this great career.

Even before the Hughes and Woodward books made their appearance the American people had a picture of the first president that was far different from that given in most histories. Too many of Washington's early biographers deliberately twisted or suppressed the truth and resorted to inventions of the imagination. They were moralizing propagandists and myth-makers, not historians. This was apparently satisfactory to the old school of historians, but not to the public which prefers the truth, unadorned by myth.

Most Americans have enough faith in the character of George Washington to feel that the truth cannot detract from his fame and name, which certainly rest upon something more substantial and inspiring than legends. Historians of the old school made Washington almost superhuman. The new school finds him to have been supremely human and all the greater for it.

The main trouble with the girl of today is she refuses to act like the girl of yesterday.

From the picture "A Regular Scout" starring Fred Thomson.

THE STORY THUS FAR.
Fred Blake impersonates Fred Monroe, long-lost son of a Sierra family, after this "son" has caused Mrs. Blake's death. "Monroe" is killed provisionally, and Fred is hunted by the police. He meets the Sierra Boy Scout troop, in which Buddy Monroe is a Scout. At the ranch, Fred keeps the Burlingame from selling oil stock to Mrs. Monroe and June, her beautiful daughter. His conscience begins to trouble him.

Fred looked up, his face hardening. What sort of coward was he to be drooling like a weak-kneed baby when his whole being cried out for manliness, decision?

"Buddy," he said grimly, "I'm going to tell yuh somethin'." "I—"

Fred whirled around, utterly taken by surprise. June stood quietly, with traces of tears around her eyes, in the doorway. The sight of that sweet, tear-stained face unmannered him. All his courage fled. He grew white.

"Haven't you something to tell me, Fred?" June was subdued, restrained, tense.

"Why, June, I—I—"

Buddy quietly slipped out of the room.

Suddenly June's face softened, grew tender. A fleeting flash of her eyes, and she turned her head. "Whatever happens—Fred—I believe in you," she said in a low voice, and fled from the room, leaving Fred, faint, miserable, helpless, feeling despicable, sitting with loose, limp hands on the sofa in the living-room.

CHAPTER X FRED ACTS

It was a cloudless, typical California night. The sky was studded with myriad twinkling stars, al-

He shuffled, desperate, disheveled. The moonlight gleamed on the polished metal of his weapons, still hanging inertly, but ready for use, in his belt. He glanced at them, fascinated. Slowly he took one out and regarded it curiously, half-afraid.

Yes, he was a good shot. A dead shot. Home—home!—he had had medals for his accuracy with the pistol and rifle. Could nick the heart of a target ten out of ten times at fifty, a hundred, a hundred and fifty feet. Do more than that. Hit a man's hat and never touch his head. Even in the darkness—now—he could hit the end of that corral gate where the light struck on a bolt. He looked at the gun fascinated. He could do this. Could he shoot a near—a nearer—object?

Shuddering, he dropped the revolver back into its holster and laughed bitterly. No. Not a coward that way. That wasn't a man's way. It would not be Buddy's way, a regular scout.

June—what had she meant by saying, "Whatever happens—Fred—I believe in you?" . . . It was a curious speech. And then she had fled, and he would have sworn that there were deep, unplumbed depths of radiant tears in her great eyes. Whatever happens. . . . Had she sensed something?

Funny about that scar. So the Monroe heir had never had one, eh? Very fortunate. Fred shook his head. There was something up.

What a peculiar evening it had been. With Mrs. Monroe quiet, subdued, almost a true woman of true stock. And Mrs. Monroe—she was no different. Her son had been a murderer—but he had not been her son in more than name. Since childhood he had been out of the range of her good influence, a roisterer, about, probably badly companioned, a tramp and a wastrel all his life.

Probably he had not meant to kill the old lady who stood in the way of his robbery. His mother had had no marks of violence on her. She had died of shock—the shock of being suddenly confronted with ugliness and violence—and the loss of his champion's cup! That was it! Now Fred remembered the absence of the cup. So she had seen the thief steal that prized cup, over which she had spent so many a proud hour! And then had died—of grief and shock and weakness.

No, no violence, but Fred Monroe had been her murderer just the same.

Fred Blake took his head in his hands. So he was not to avenge that mother's death after all? How could it be? How stern and vengeful he had been that fatal day when he stood over the stiffening body of the mysteriously shot murderer! How he had vowed eternal enmity on the man's family!

And here he was . . . weakening.

For hours, in the deepening darkness of the mountain night, Fred Blake sat, fully dressed and armed, in his window-chair and battled with his spirit and his conscience. It was a long, hard, exhausting battle. At one moment the set, sweet features of his dead mother arose to spur him on to vengeance—and the next moment the vision of June and her mother and Buddy obliterated his ugly passion, like the driving rain washing away all signs of footprints on a dusty trail.

And then, with the first faint spangles of dawn peeping through the black rifts of the night, with the first suspicion of sun on the head of Mt. Whitney, snowy and cold before him, Fred Blake went to the bureau, extracted a sheet of paper, a bottle of ink and a pen, and proceeded, with pale but determined features to write a short note. This is what he wrote:

most near, friendly and satisfying. A soft breeze whispered through the pines on the flanks of the mountains and descended in gusty troops on the Monroe ranch, lifting the dust a trifle, rustling and crowding over the eaves of the bunkhouse, where the tired cowboys lay sleeping like dead men.

In his room above the porch of the ranch-house Fred Blake sat, fully dressed, at an open window, watching the stars. Friendly—but not to him. Now they seemed instruments of mockery, revealing to him how happy was the world, and what an outsider he was in the world of happiness. Never had the lead of misery weighed so heavily upon his heart; never had he felt the burden of past wrongs as he did now. It was like a cross. A cross which for some inscrutable reason God had laid upon his shoulders, to bear with staggering heart through a weary life-time.

The moon poured into his room, illuminating his white bed in bold relief, outlining the polished surface of the wash-bowl, drenching the snowy bed-linen with silver and gold. It touched his magic fingers to the rugged, stern features of the man sitting there staring out into the half-light of a California night, and retreated as if it were afraid of what it felt.

What a world of pain. . . . That sweet, gay, understanding little wild-flower of the range. . . . June. A sweet, soft name for a sweet, soft woman. How cowardly he was! Allowing this innocent, trusting young girl to kiss him, caress him, murmur words of love in his ear—because she thought he was her brother, while all the time in his black heart he was deceiving her, planning the ruin of her family, of her mother, of little Buddy.

There was a boy! Fred thought with inert pain of the thoughtfulness, the courage, the manliness of this little chap who stood as high as a man's ribs and yet had the heart of a great race of pioneers beating high in his little chest. Could Buddy practice such deception? No. He was a scout. A Boy Scout. Who was taught above all things to be honest, truthful, a good citizen, a fearless fighter, a brave and useful lad. That troop of little boys, swooping along on their small horses, grim, determined, disciplined, happy. Oh, to be a boy again!

Buddy had once called him . . . a regular scout. If he had only known! How he would despise him, pity him! A regular scout—oh, God, if a man were only two men, and if one man's strength were only the strength and will of two men!

NASH

Leads the World in Motor Car Value

Steering is never tiring—when you drive a Nash

A cheerful willingness to answer your hand on the wheel is one of the very first things you notice, when you drive a Nash.

In many ways, Nash has provided for the ease and comfort of the arms that steer the car. In getting into or out of a tight place at the curb you will particularly notice the slight effort needed.

When you turn a corner, you'll welcome the shorter wind-up of the steering wheel.

In an emergency, this short turn of the wheel means quick responsiveness—and an accident averted. Nash steering is easier—faster—less tiring on the arms and wrists—indefinitely safer in dense traffic.

Nothing has been spared to build a more delightful car to drive. This steering mechanism is, beyond question, the most expensive type built today for cars in the Nash price field.

Like the steering, every detail in the car reflects the Nash determination to lead the world in motor car value.

Another instance of the outstanding excellence in Nash design is the 7-bearing motor—without a doubt the smoothest type in all the world.

finished by scoring a double deuce. "Will" Fine, who took Wetherill's place in the line-up, started out with a bang, getting two field goals in a hurry. "Will" evidently believing in getting them while his "wind" was good. "Les" Longhurst had four field goals and 3 single pointers for a total of 11 points. "Bud" Pearson played a whale of a game, scoring the most sensational field goal of the evening. Ralph Ratcliffe was a stonewall in defense and was the happiest man on the team when the final whistle blew thus ending a classic.

Gentlemen:

Are we still the same old friends?

Probably, an unusual question to ask, I'll admit. But, when one of our old customers stops, we sort of feel the same as if a good friend suddenly stopped talking to us.

You know—just a trifle apprehensive and worrisome. Wonder if we've made a blunder, or done something to hurt the other fellow's feelings.

By George, I believe, in a case like that, I'd go right up to my friend and say "Old top, what's wrong?—anything out o' place I've done?—any real reason why we can't be the same old friends?"

That's just the way I feel about your silence. Anything wrong? Tell us about it. I'm sure we can make it right, pronto.

We want you back with the old gang. Come on, let's hear from you. Even a word o' cheer will be welcome.

Our Spring Line of Suits and Top Coats has just arrived from Fifth Avenue, New York. Harris Bros.' prices mean savings of $7.50 to $12.50.

Last call—33 to 50% reduction on all our Suits and Overcoats from our winter stock.
